

The International Prostate Group (IPG) is a venture of nationally recognized centers of excellence for prostate therapy that offers leading edge care and treatment.

The IPG has set its goal to be a contact point and information centre for patients and doctors alike concerning prostate treatment and research. The integration of specialists' cooperation of international centres are also part of continuous process.

New and innovative therapies are constantly subjected to careful examination and compared critically to existing standard therapies before being incorporated into the spectrum of medical procedures within the IPG.

Founded in June 2007 under the direction of Westgerman Prostate Center and New York Prostate Institute the IPG aims to enhance and optimize standard treatment procedures for prostate disease.

The founders of IPG are world-renowned lecturers, researchers and teachers in the field of prostate cancer treatment with more than 15 years experience, especially regarding pioneering research and development of brachytherapy and over 5000 implants performed.

More important than the type of treatment you choose is the selection of the physician that performs it. Physician experience and specialization result in proper patient selection and appropriate treatment recommendations tailored to the individual patient.

All patients diagnosed with prostate cancer deserve a second opinion to review their treatment options.
